

Programme: Master of Laws in Information and Communication Technology

University: University of Oslo

Website:

- <http://www.uio.no/english/>
- <http://www.uio.no/english/studies/programmes/ictlaw-master/>

City, Country: Oslo, Norway

Duration:

1, 5 years – Full-time programme. The programme is of 15 months duration, with two full semesters of lectures and tutorials (six mandatory courses in total), and the third semester devoted exclusively to the completion of a master's thesis.

Fee: There is no tuition fee for this LL.M. programme

Application information:

<http://www.uio.no/english/studies/admission/master/>

Admission requirements:

- Higher Education Entrance Qualification and a completed bachelor's degree comparable to a Norwegian bachelor's degree. Applicants with foreign education, please refer to the country list.
- A specialization defined by the programme (Special admission requirements - see below)
- A minimum grade point average (GPA) of C (in Norwegian scale) or equivalent from the specialization in your degree.
- A language requirement documented by one of the tests/exams below:
  - a) Passed examination in English foundation course (140 hours/5 periods per week) in Norwegian upper secondary school with a minimum grade of 4 (or an equivalent grade from a Nordic upper secondary school) or alternatively passed examination in English from second and/or third school year, or
  - b) An internationally recognised English language proficiency test.

Additional information:

The programme is offered at the Norwegian Research Center for Computers and Law (NRCCL). The NRCCL is one of the oldest and most prestigious research institutions in this field. The center has a strong international orientation with well-established links to many foreign research organizations. Its staff and associates originate from countries all over the world.